With the exception of the Orthodox, the chances of American Jews having Jewish grandchildren and great-grandchild is becoming increasingly remote based on the following:

1. Intermarriage rates;
2. The increasing percentage of Jews that do not marry and/or marry but choose not to have children.

This inter-generational demographic chart ("the Chart") is part of an article co-authored by Antony Gordon and Richard M. Horowitz titled "Will Your Grandchild Be Jewish? Revisited II" ("the Article"). The Article is the product of extensive research conducted by Gordon and Horowitz between 2014-2016 based on the raw data of the most recent national demographic study on American Jewry conducted by the Pew Research Center and released on October 1st, 2013.

* Although there is no clear definition of "Centrist Orthodox" or "Hasidic/Yeshiva Orthodox", the main distinguishing factors relate to attitudes regarding formal secular studies, family size and the type of day school children attend.

* Statistics pertaining to fertility rates for Orthodox were based primarily on data extrapolated by Dr. Marvin Schick (See: "A Census of Jewish Day Schools in the United States - 2013-2014" - October 2014)
